Expressway Trucks Update

Planning Ahead for 2022 - A Note From our Truck Sales Manager

"One of the reasons I love this industry is that its women and men rise to meet challenges and get even stronger in tough times.

As a key part of the transportation industry, truck manufacturers have been facing many challenges of their own. To name a few, there is a global shortage of semiconductors with modern trucks using 15 to 35 each! Add to that tires, electrical components, resins, steel and aluminum are in high demand and short supply.

Not surprisingly, the industry as a whole will face price increases for 2022.

Despite the ingenuity and determination Volvo has demonstrated and their North American production advantage, most of the capacity Volvo has left for 2021 is sold.

Our customers are the best experts to determine what their needs will be 8-12 months from now, and we are confident that production capacity will open up as we head into 2022. It also seems that strong demand for trucks will continue to drive orders as economies rebound and over aged trucks need replacement.

Our Sales Team is ready to give sound advice, secure pricing and schedule build spots for early 2022. Make sure to act early and contact us as soon as possible to smooth out all the details."
